Good News for the Animals!

European Union Permanently Bans Import of Wild Birds for Pet Trade

The European Union (EU) recently announced new trade regulation governing the import of live birds that will effectively ban the importation of wild-caught birds for the pet trade. The EU was the largest importer of wild caught birds in the world, responsible for over 90% of imports of threatened and endangered species. Prior to the current ban, the EU imported approximately 1.76 million birds for the pet trade each year. With this ban in place, the biggest importer of wild birds is now Japan.

CA Whales Protected from Sonar

The California Coastal Commission agreed to enact lifesaving precautions that will protect whales from sonar training in California waters. The commission voted 8-1 to require the Navy to commit to life-saving measures during sonar training including staying out of the Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary and other important whale habitats, powering down Navy sonar during night-time exercises and in other conditions of low visibility, and enforcing adequate safety zones around sonar vessels to prevent the blasting of nearby whales.

Last Bullring in Barcelona, Spain to Close

Bullfighting is facing an uncertain future in Spain with the recent announcement that the last bullring in Barcelona is to close after failing to draw enough spectators. The rising cost of mounting a spectacle that a growing number of Spaniards view as a cruel and unnecessary part of their culture has forced the promoters of the Monumental Plaza de Toros to cut their losses and look for alternative uses for the ring. The closure of the last bullring in Catalonia's capital city follows that of two others in recent years – one of which is being transformed into a shopping center. Following a series of public protests and a petition of more than 250,000 Catalan names, Barcelona declared itself an anti-bullfighting city two years ago. Another 38 Catalan municipalities have since followed suit.

Raley's Grocery Chain Agrees to Stop Selling Live Lobsters

Raley's grocery chain announced recently that it would never again sell live lobsters in any of its 138 stores. PETA issued an action alert after learning that Raley's was confining lobsters – while still alive – in tiny plastic containers barely large than the lobster's bodies. The lobsters did not receive any water to live in or food at all until they were either sold or they died. After being contacted by thousands of compassionate people around the country, Raley's agreed never again to sell live lobsters in its family of stores, which includes the Bel Air, Nob Hill and Food Source chains. For more information about lobsters and how you can help them, please visit <http://www.LobsterLib.com>.

Polar Bears May Receive Protection Under Endangered Species Act

Under pressure from a lawsuit filed by NRDC, the Center for Biological Diversity and other citizens, the Bush administration announced that it is formally proposing to protect the polar bear under the Endangered Species Act – a crucial first step toward saving the bear from the ravages of global warming. These groups are urging the administration to hold public hearings on this issue so that concerned Americans have a chance to speak out in defense of polar bears.

Action Items – Your Letters/Calls Needed

Ask Legislators to Support HR 137/S 261 and Stop Animal Fighting

Current legislation – HR 137/S 261 – will authorize felony-level jail time for violations of the federal law on animal fighting (dog fighting, cockfighting and hog-dog fighting) and ban interstate and foreign transport of cockfighting implements.

Unanimously approved by the Senate during the last Congress, it stalled in the House, but was reintroduced the first day of the new Congress; more than half the House joined as co-sponsors during the first week. Please urge your legislators to support this important bill to stop animal fighting.

Urge FDA to Require Truth-in-Labeling on Egg Cartons

From 2002 to 2005, the majority of U.S. egg producers labeled their egg cartons with a logo that read "Animal Care Certified." Despite the image conveyed by such a message, the hens who laid these eggs were confined for their entire lives in wire battery cages so small that they can barely even move or even stretch a wing. On a daily basis, these birds are subjected to abuses so terrible they would be illegal if forced on dogs or cats.

In 2003, Ohio-based Compassion Over Killing \(COK\) filed legal petitions with federal agencies and the Better Business Bureau, alleging that producers were engaged in misleading advertising. Over the next two years, they conducted investigations inside so-called "Animal Care Certified" egg farms, then argued before the Better Business Bureau, lobbied federal agencies, produced damning media exposés, conducted consumer polls and public outreach, and filed a lawsuit. In 2005, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) announced that the deceptive "Animal Care Certified" logo can no longer be put on egg cartons nationwide. One year after this victory, COK is requesting that the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) take action to protect consumers against a broad range of misrepresentations on egg cartons. The egg industry is fighting this effort tooth and nail, so your help is needed to ensure the FDA does the right thing.

Join Compassion Over Killing's campaign and visit IDA's site for more information and to send a comment to the FDA: http://ga0.org/indefenseofanimals/notice-description.tcl?newsletter_id=5862122.

Donate Blankets for Dogs Freezing in Desert

It was recently brought to our attention that an animal rescue group in the High Desert area, Agua Dulce, is in desperate need of blankets for their dogs NOW. The temperature in High Desert is about 10-15 degrees and the dogs are freezing in this cold weather.

Local activists and concerned citizens are coordinating efforts to send blankets to dogs freezing in the desert and are setting up several drop-off locations throughout L.A. and other counties. If you're located in Orange County and would like to help by donating blankets, please contact Tina Locklear at tina.locklear@ocpausa.org or 714-331-1014 to set up a meeting to deliver the blankets to her; she'll ensure the blankets are sent to the appropriate parties to keep the dogs warm at night in the desert.

If you'd like to help out financially, make a check out to the Villalobos Rescue Center, P.O. Box 1544, Canyon Country, CA. 91386, and mark the check for the "heater fund" so they can send you a note with a photo of what you have done for the dogs.

Note: <http://www.PetsInTheHood.org> area do not have adequate blankets and supplies to keep the animals warm in the freezing night temperatures.

Demand Criminal Investigation of U.S. Soldiers Caught on Video Abusing Dog

Animal advocates nationwide are horrified over a video allegedly taken from a CD found in Baghdad's Green Zone. The video depicts what appear to be U.S. soldiers taunting and tormenting a seriously injured dog. Several men laugh while pitching rocks at the suffering animal. Causing animals to suffer unnecessarily is a crime in the United States and this behavior must not be tolerated.

Please contact the secretary of defense and demand that the Department of Defense investigate this matter and hold responsible any soldier found to be involved in this incident. For more information, visit http://getactive.peta.org/campaign/iraq_dog_abuse.
